Subject: 2014 Elections: A Tale of Two Parties

The 2014 Elections proved to be a mixed bag for Democrats and Republicans. Democrats were able to maintain their monopoly on statewide elected offices, with incumbent Governor Andrew Cuomo (and his Lieutenant Governor running mate, Kathy Hochul) prevailing over his Republican challenger, Rob Astorino and his running mate, Chris Moss, 54%-41% (Green Party candidate Howie Hawkins received nearly 5%), current Democrat Attorney General Eric Schneiderman beating former Governor Pataki official, John Cahill, 53%-39%, and State Comptroller Tom DiNapoli defeating Republican Bob Antonacci 57%-34%. Notably, Governor Cuomo received strong support from voters in New York City, in Upstate counties with cities such as Erie County (Buffalo), and in parts of the Adirondacks where he has heavily promoted the local economy.

The State Senate, currently led by a coalition of 29 Republicans and 5 Independent Democrats, was the subject of significant speculation this election season given the substantial enrollment advantage for Democratic voters, the announcement in May that the Independent Democrats (IDC) planned to enter into a coalition with their Senate Democratic colleagues in 2015, and the possible shifting allegiances of two other Democrats – Senator Ruben Diaz, Sr. and Sen. Simcha Felder, who have worked closely with Republicans in the past.

A favorite Albany past time became trying to identify and handicap the multiple scenarios by which the Republicans, the IDC, or the Democrats might form a majority if none were able to secure the majority through their own members, and what would happen to the party left in the minority. In a modest surprise (modest because recent public polls proved remarkably accurate) the Republicans were able to defeat several incumbent Democratic Senators, protect their own incumbents – with one exception, and hold their “open” seats to increase their membership to 32, the minimum number of Senators needed to hold the Senate majority. Most prominently, Republican challenger George Amedore was able to handily defeat incumbent Capital Region Senator Cecilia Tkaczyk, to whom he had lost in 2012 by 18 votes; Republican Susan Serino defeated incumbent Terry Gipson in the mid-Hudson Valley; and Rich Funke prevailed over Senator Ted O’Brien in Rochester. The sole disappointment for Senate Republicans was the loss by Senator Mark Grisanti to Democrat Marc Panepinto – this followed

Sen. Grisanti's loss in the Republican primary to Kevin Stocker and complicated his hope for re-election as he was forced to run solely on the Independence Party ballot line.

It remains unclear whether the Republicans will seek or entertain a coalition with the IDC or other Democrats, such as Sen. Simcha Felder, who has caucused with the Republicans for the past two years. Given the narrow margin of its majority and IDC leader Jeffrey Klein's recent public intimation that the May agreement to cooperate with his fellow Democrats may not be binding, the expectation is that there will at least be confidential discussions of a continued Republican-IDC coalition. Until such final decisions are made, however, the leadership, committee chairmanships, and other issues related to the functions of the Senate may not be known for some time.

Not to be forgotten is the State Assembly, led by Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver (D-Manhattan) since 1994 and who is approaching the duration record for that post, which remains firmly in the hands of the Democratic Majority. The Assembly Democrats are expected to have approximately 105 members, compared to 45 Republican Assemblymembers once the final tallies and disputed races are decided. With the start of the 2015 legislative session, given the number of retirements of long-standing Assemblymembers, there is likely to be some changes in leadership posts, committee chairmanships and perhaps even staff. We expect more details on any such changes in the coming months and we will share that information as it becomes available.

For your reference, we have included a complete listing of the election results. If you have any questions regarding these results, please feel free to contact the Albany office at 518-431-6700.
